Case Study: Building a Mitigation Plan

Meridian Trust Bank's security team built its first formal mitigation plan after several near-miss phishing incidents.

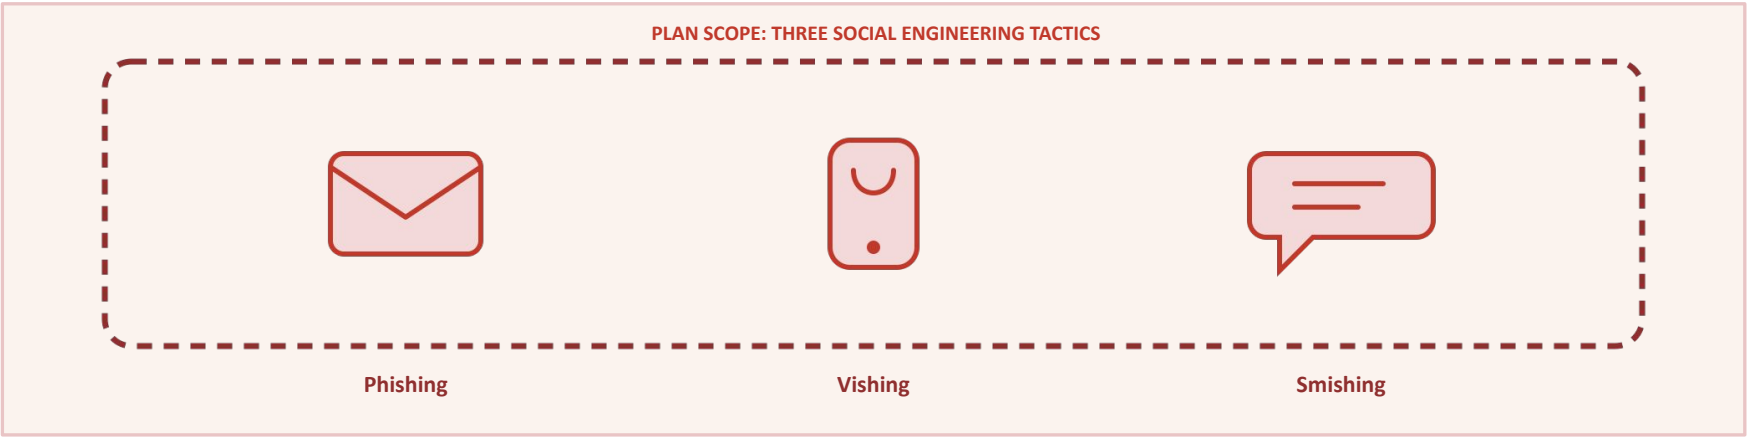

Dominic Yeakel | 10/8/2026

1 The Scope

The Scope

The team defined the plan's scope to cover three tactics from Day 1, recognizing that focusing only on phishing would leave real gaps. This comprehensive scope was a deliberate early decision.

2 The Goals

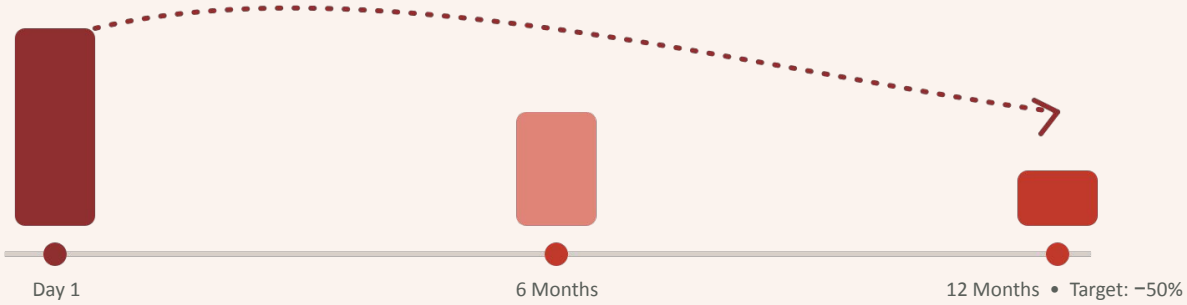

The Goals

The team set a specific goal of reducing phishing simulation click rates by half within one year, tied to the bank's actual incident history. This gave the plan a clear, measurable target from the start.

GOAL

Cut phishing simulation click rates in half, measured against the bank's own incident history

3 The Outcome

The Outcome

Having a written, scoped plan made it easier to secure budget and leadership support for the ongoing program described later today. A clear plan document is often what turns good intentions into a funded initiative.

CARRYING THIS FORWARD

A plan that's scoped broadly, aimed at a real number, and written down is a plan leadership will fund.

